SECOND QUARTER

Picton came out determined to hold our line, but Wm. Daly changed signals and soon had ball into Picton's territory. Perry made a rouge.

Picton kicked the ball again and made an attempt to break through. After using Smith they gained their yards from 10-yard line single-handed. Daly getting ball from a pass, made a getaway, scoring a touch.

P. C. I. kicked ball, Perry got it, touched and Picton fumbled. Killorin got ball and made a touch for Napanee. N.C.I., 22; P.C.I., 0.

THIRD QUARTER.

P.C.I. kick-off. Napanee returned ball and downed Picton man on their 35-yard line. Daly tried kick and Stewart made a rouge. Napanee used Smith for bucking line a lot. All subs were given a try out this quarter. Bill Daly was given a chance to show colors and got away for touch. Geo. Daly converted ball for a point. N.C.I., 29; P.C.I., 0.

FOURTH QUARTER.

Napanee had the game, so only tried out their signals. Buck after buck was tried, Smith gaining yards. Napanee lost touch. Perry got hurt, but went on field after first aid was rendered him. Picton got away for touch, but Smith made a drive and then rolled Picton's man out of the field. Play stopped. N.C.I., 29; P.C.I., 0.

Picton will play return game at the Driving Park, on Saturday, Nov. 25th, so come along to see the boys play the liveliest game of all.

No one player can be picked out as a star. The playing was all team work, no individual trying for honors. This team work will win any game.

Following gis the line-up:

Killorin, Flying wing; Stewart, Half; Geo. Daly, Half; W. Perry, Half; Wm. Daly, Quarter; Gleason, Centre; Barrett, Inside; Garrett, Inside; Scott, Middle; Smith, Middle; Cowle, Outside; Wheeler, Outide; Walters, Robbin, Judson, Subs.

The annual report of Kingston general hospital shows a small deficit of $2,039 for the year, a very satisfactory statement.

KEEP ON MOVING.

Two frogs fell into a milk-pail deep,
And one poor frog did nothing but weep;
He sank to the bottom as heavy as lead,
And there in the morning they found him dead.

The other frog shouted, "I'll have a good try.
The pail may be deep, but I don't wish to die."
He churned up the milk with his legs here and hind—
There's nothing like having a masterful mind—
For when the next morning this froggy was found,
ON A PAT OF FRESH BUTTER HE FLOATED AROUND.

COURT OF ASSIZE.

The Assizes for the County of Lennox and Addington opened at the Court House on Tuesday last, at 1 p.m., His Lordship Mr. Justice Smith presiding. There being no criminal or other business requiring the attendance of Grand or Petit Jury, they were not present, having been notifified not to appear.

The only two cases to be entered for trial were the following:—

Meagher vs. Town of Napanee. —An action brought by Marion Meagher vs. the Town of Napanee for injuries sustained by her on the night of January 3rd, 1922, when she slipped and fell on the west side of John street, between Dan Hogan's and Ed. Lapum's house, whereby her hip was dislocated. Several doctors gave evidence that she would be maimed for life. The lawyers were E. Gus Porter, K.C., for plaintiff, and W. S. Herrington, K.C., for defendant. Judgment in above case was rendered on Friday, dismissing the action with costs.

Malone vs. Thompson Powder Co.—An action brought by Ernest Malone against the Thompson Powder Co., to recover a salary as Superintendent of the above works. The defendants counter claimed for a large amount, claiming that a certain amount of ingredients not mentioned in the formula had been used by the plaintiff in manufacturing the powder and that the defendants had lost the sale of a large quantity of powder. Judgment for plaintiff for $1038 with costs. Counter claim dismissed, with costs. E. Gus Porter, K.C., and J. E. Madden for plaintiff, and W. S. Herrington, K.C., for defendants.

BEST WEEK TO SECURE LARGEST VOTE SCHEDULE DECLINES SATURDAY NIGHT

Most votes win Chevrolet car and other valuable prizes.—Coupon in every week's paper of immense value.—Save your coupon.—Vote for your friends.—Most of the ladies receiving good support.

Special Offer-480,000 Votes for $12 Club

Special offer good for two weeks.—Subscriptions sent in this week will get a higher regular vote.—Every subscription turned in for the two weeks counts on special offer.—Millions of votes going out in the paper every week.—Patrons of the paper send in many votes.—Subscriptions start slowly.—Time yet to enter the drive.

This is the big week for the largest vote that will be offered at any time in the Express circulation drive. The free vote coupon will decline some after this week and the regular vote will also decline after the coming Saturday night. See the "Regular Vote Schedule." A one year subscription will get 40,000 votes this week and only 30,000 next week. Subscriptions secured this and next week will count the same on the special offer.

THE SPECIAL OFFER.

480,000 votes will be issued, besides the regular votes, for a club of $12.00 in subscriptions, made up of one or more years as they are secured by the contestants or paid at the office. There is no limit to the special offer and if you secure over the twelve dollars the additional votes will be given and pro-rated for whatever amount is over the $12.00 club. The offer is good for two weeks, this and the coming week, ending Saturday night, December 2nd.

The patrons of the paper are sending in votes by the thousands. Look over the vote as published in this issue. Most of the ladies who were selected to put the drive over are receiving votes. Many of them are active in the campaign and there are others who are receiving a fairly good vote that have as yet made no attempt to secure votes. This drive, as announced in the beginning, is going to be decided largely as to whom shall have the awards by the patrons of the paper. Of course, those who ask for votes and are active in the drive are very sure of getting the best vote. Many of the ladies have signified their willingness to accept the votes and make a bid for others. The drive is just getting under way good, and the interest is growing daily with the patrons, the nominees and the public in general.

TIME YET TO ENTER THE DRIVE.

There is yet time to get in the drive and win one of the best prizes. Many have made the start but so far but few subscriptions have been paid. The millions of votes that go out in the the paper every week, the free voting coupon, is doing the big work just at present. The subscriptions will come later. Get your friends to save the coupons, good for votes for you. Get busy this week. This should be the banner week of the drive.

DAVY & ALLISON.

In another column of this issue the Bell Telephone Company again invite the public to visit the Central Office, Dundas street, any day or evening of Telephone Week, November 20th to 25th, inclusive. To the "Express" Manager Graham explains the idea behind Telephone Week as simply an effort after the highest standard of telephone service through wide-spread public cooperation.

"After all," said Mr. Graham, "the telephone user has no small part in determining the quality of the service. There are always occurrences involved in every completed call—the calling party, the operator and the person called. To secure the best type of service all three must observe certain quite simple but vital requirements of good telephone practice.

"Now we have found from actual experience that when subscribers know something about telephone equipment and the work that our operators are called upon to do in completing a call, they can help us there and we ourselves can adjust arrangements to better advantage, ensuring both for themselves and the community a service that cannot be improved upon. Obviously there is no place like our central office for showing people just what lies behind their telephone instruments, and our whole staff are hoping that every day and night this week will see a big section of our public honoring us with a visit. They will be heartily welcome."

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

Interest in the bye-election contests in the five vacant constituencies, has developed during the week with the holding of party conventions in Lanark, where the chief fight seems likely to develop. At a largely attended gathering which was addressed by Hon. T. A. Low and Hon. W. R. Motherwell, the Liberals of Lanark riding chose David Findlay, of Carleton Place as their standard bearer in the fight and gave Mr. Findlay's candidature a good start by their enthusiasm and also by their determination to stand solidly behind him until the end of the fight.

In Mr. Findlay the Liberals of Lanark have a strong candidate, and one who will be very much in the running until the last vote is counted on the night of December 4th. A candidate who has the interests of his constituents very much at heart, and whose record in the constituency as manufacturer and business man is on which wins for him the support of all classes. Mr. Findlay's election would be a distinct gain both to the government forces and to the House of Commons generally and his friends both in Lanark and outside will be working hard for his success at the polls.

There is a likelihood of acclamations being given to Liberal candidates in one or more of the other vacant constituencies. Megantic seems likely to return a Liberal by this means and there is little likelihood of anyone but Liberal candidates carrying any of the other seats. In Halifax a fight seems likely with the chances very strongly in favor of the Liberal candidate who will probably come through with a majority at least as big as that of his predecessor.

* *

Supporters of the Progressive party in Lanark and elsewhere, who hitherto placed any considerable amount of stock in the class consciousness side of the Farmer movement, exponents of which urged that the Farmer party should consider farmers' interests alone, will find much food for thought in the letter of resignation placed before the Progressive caucus at Winnipeg on Friday by Hon. T. A. Crerar, Leader of the Progressives.

Mr. Crerar resigned the leadership of the Progressive party, and in so doing warned against one of the great dangers of the farmer movement that there was a tendency on the part of some of its leaders such as H. W. Wood, in Alberta, and J. J. Morrison in Ontario, to bang on the farmer party a sign reading "None but farmers need apply," and thus perhaps, unwittingly do a great deal more harm than good.

In part Mr. Crerar said :

"The greatest menace the Progressive movement had to combat in the last federation election was the fear in the hearts of thousands of electors in Canada, who were in general sympathy with its policies, that it would become purely a class movement. The attitude of H. W. Wood, of Alberta, and J. J. Morrison, in Ontario,—and I do not question the sincerity of either—I am bound to say gave grounds for this fear. Mr. Morrison's attitude is plainly that only those of the farmers have never been represented in our legislatures as they should have been, and he says the farmers of constituencies where they are strong enough to have a chance of doing it, 'Elect your own man as a farmer, and keep him independent in the house to voice your interest.'

"A member of parliament is not a delegate from his constituency to act only when some one in it pulls the strings. He is a representative and if his duties are properly discharged, he must act for, not only his own constituency but for the whole Dominion, in the innumerable matters that come before parliament for its consideration. Nor does he represent only one class in his constituency ; consequently he is the representative not of the farmer, or the labor man, or the business man, or the professional man, but of all. Those among our friends, then, who hope to exert a political influence in the country for the country's good and hang out the sign "none but farmers need apply" are doing, unwittingly, not only a disservice to their country as a whole, but an injury in the long run to the very people whom they most desire to help. Such, of course, will not, I am sure, so intended, would I am convinced, lead to the settings up of class antagonism [illegible] country, which would add but one more to the many inherent difficulties that already exist in carrying on our governmental business and I for one can give no countenance or support to it.

"The remedy lies not in this direction—it lies in including all people of good will who believe in certain definite principals as applied to public policies and are willing to co-operate in every legitimate and honest way to bring these principles into effect in public policies and public administration."

This warning and advice coming from Hon. T. A. Crerar will give many of the Progressive members and supporters food for serious study. It is practically the same as that placed before the people in dozens of constituencies at the time that, by the present Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, in supporting the candidature of Liberals against men who ran under the Progressive standard.

The Liberal party, Rt. Hon. Mr. King, pointed out, was as fully representative of the farmers as a class as it was of any other class ; and also its principles were such that they should invite the support of every Canadian whether he were a farmer, professional man, business man or workman. The Liberal party, the Leader stated, did not represent any one class nor did it intend to legislate in the interests of any single class. Its candidates included men in every walk of life, who if elected, would strive to govern the country in the interests of all the people in it. That such was the case has been amply proven by the actions of the government since taking over the reins of office.

* * * *

Farmers in both the east and west have been benefited by the efforts, this time successful, on the part of the present government to secure the removal of the embargo against Canadian cattle which has for years been maintained in Britain. Again referring to the speech of Mr. Crerar, it is only necessary to point to the former Progressive leader's words to show that as a result of the Liberal government's support of the farmers in the matter of lower freight rates, the farmers of Western Canada this fall have saved some $30,000,000 in freight charges against their produce. In regard to the West Board the Government went as far as the constitution allowed it to go and provided the provinces with machinery for formation of a board.

And as a means of securing improved trade conditions for Canada with a consequent benefit to all classes in the dominion, the government has already negotiated trade agreements with France and Italy, while an agreement with Australia is about to be negotiated.

In addition to this revenues have been increased and expenditures reduced, until the effect is being shown on the national debt. The financial statement for the month of October showed a reduction during the month alone of over $14,000,000 which is very good evidence of the fact that the present government is leaving no stone unturned in its effort to make Canada a better place for its citizens. Progressives, do you mean to live in, whether you are farmers or belong to any other class of citizens.

Go North, Young Man.

It is just as Vilhjalmur Stefansson says—this "go north" movement "is the onward Course of Empire." Civilization had to begin in the warm lands. Assyria, Egypt, Greece, where men did many animals sleep would be allowed to keep alive. And constantly, though not steadily—with a great recession, in fact, in what are called the dark ages—the seats of power and wealth have gone into more northern latitudes; Berlin, Paris, London, Antwerp, with mean annual temperatures running from 48 to 52 Fahrenheit, bettering the glories of Babylon, Alexandria and Constantinople. Alleyne Ireland has expressed a similar idea in another form—that a high civilization cannot exist in a mean temperature above 75. This latter rule, according to Mr. Stefansson's reckoning, would not exclude Bagdad, Babylon or Cathage.

The argument that a touch of winter is necessary to maintain man in mental and physical vigor is not what Mr. Stefansson chiefly relies upon. He is impressed with the productivity of the north, even many regions as yet little inhabited. "Any land, even in the tropics," he points out, "is of high value when its own man as a farmer, and keep him independent in the house to voice your interest." is very high, and no land, even in the Polar regions, very far north by the map, where on account of moderate level, favoring ocean currents, light precipitation or other combining causes crops are produced rivalling those of places much further south. Many high regions in the temperate zone have greater cold than the North Pole. The "cold pole of the Northern Hemisphere" is in Siberia, north of Yakutsk, where the thermometer goes to 92-96 below. And oats, barley, rye and garden "sass" are grown there by fair-haired people of European aspect.

ANIMALS AS MOTHERS.

Instinct Is Strong In the Lower Creatures.

A fascinating article on "Animals as Mothers" is contributed to the Strand Magazine by Prof. J. Arthur Thompson. Some "difficult cases" are treated with humor and instructive comment—

"There are cases where maternal care seems conspicuous by its absence," says Prof. Thompson. "What is one to make of them? There is no special difficulty with the 'spawning.' The frog deposits her thousand or more eggs in the shallow water of the pond, and cares no more about them. There are too many tadpoles to be looked after, and the race continues in spite of the huge infantile mortality. Nature does not support the superfluous—even when it is a virtue. But the way of the frog would not work in the case of the golden eagle with its two eggs, or of the bat with its single offspring.

"Then there are cases where man makes a puzzle by failing to recognize the intellectual limitations of the animal. Many a female fish will devour her own offspring if she comes across them in the water; but it is not to be supposed that she is giving sense aware that they are hers. We may set against this more than one case where the male shelters the eggs in his mouth! He fasts till they are hatched; yet it looks like 'tempting Providence.' In other instances, like that of Prof. Whitman's passenger pigeon, which could not, or would not, receive her eggs, though they were only a few inches off, the explanation is simply this: that in many animals the sleep which is the business of life have in the course of time been "handed over to instinct" so completely, and, in natural conditions, so effectively, that any disturbance of the routine nonplusses the animal altogether.

"We recall one of Mr. Hamerton's true stories about a cow that was so grief-stricken by the death of her calf that she would not eat her food or give any milk. So they took the skin of the calf and stuffed it with hay, and placed it before the bereaved mother. She was comforted, and licked the stuffed calf copiously; her appetite returned, and her milk-giving. But as time went on she made a hole in the calf's skin with her caresses, and ended up on the hay-stuffing ate it. Now it is fallacious to find any great difficulty in this absurd story, or in others like it. It would be erroneous to argue that the cow had no affection for her offspring because she was comforted by its stuffed skin; it would be equally erroneous to reproach the cow for its ignorance of bovine anatomy. At the same time we may admit that the brain of the domesticated cow is in a rather comatose condition.

"There are many interesting cases where the instinct for mothering is so strong that it overflows to the children of quite different animals. Miss Frances Pitt took a new-born rat, and, after putting it beside young kittens for a little to get the appropriate odor, gave it to a nursing cat. It was accepted without demur, and duly suckled, licked, and nurtured as if it had been a kitten. When the rat became able to fend for itself it kept up its friendship for the foster-mother, and used to pay her frequent visits. One day the rat came running impetuously into the room where another cat was lying, whose surprise was a spectacle. An interesting detail was that, though the foster-mother had been a good 'ratter,' she never killed another. One would like to know whether this fact could be generalized—whether a foster-mother in her subsequent life ever attacks the species of its adopted baby.

"Almost unique among backboned animals in the case of the cuckoo, which shirks almost of its maternal responsibilities, but this is a special freak—a telescoping of two whole chapters in the ordinary routine of instinctive parental behaviour."

Briar Pipes.

The word briar, as applied to a pipe, is no relation to the bonnie briar bush. In fact, it is no briar at all. The word is a corruption of the Frenchword "bruyere," the name of the shrub, from which is accumulated root, with its fine grain, the Frenh produced the pipe now known as a "Briar." There is an interesting story, belonging to French history, about a controversy between the French peasants and the Government over the right to dig up the roots of the "bruyere" after it had been made a commodity of considerable value by being used for the making of pipes. In the end the French peasants had to pay the Government for the privilege of digging the root of the "bruyere" from the public domain.

TOMS OF FLIES.

Possible Descendants of a Single Pair in One Season.

Flies increase at an enormous rate. In one breeding season—about three months—a single pair of flies will be responsible for about sixty-three tons of flies.

Luckily for us, however, flies have many enemies, otherwise we should be choked with an atmosphere so crowded with flies as to blot out the sun's light. In fact, the flies would be so numerous that, at the end of the warm season, the first frosts of winter would whiten huge mounds of humans and flies inextricably mixed, under which debris would lie sleeping what were once our great cities.

Flies don't grow. The small flies we sometimes see about the house are not, as many people suppose, "young" house flies.

Like all other insects, flies emerge from the pupa or chrysalis stage fully grown, and however long they may live they never get any bigger.

So when small flies resembling house-flies are seen in our living-rooms they are either flies of a different species, or they are undersized house flies that have been starved during the larval stage of their existence.

Another mistaken belief about the house fly is that it bites. It doesn't. Its proboscis is solely adapted for sucking, and is quite incapable of biting, or even stinging.

There is, however, another species of fly, not unlike the house fly in appearance, which sometimes invades our houses in the summer months. This insect, which scientists call stomoxys calcitrans, is a blood-sucking fly, possessed of a proboscis like an awl that sticks out straight in front of its head and can easily pierce the human skin.

It is this Mr. Stomoxys that occasionally inflicts a bite, and not the house fly, though the latter usually gets the blame. That, when you come to think of it, is very unfair, since musa docestica, as the house fly is called, has quite enough sins of its own to answer for, without being saddled with one that it couldn't commit if it tried.

Hunting Whales In the Arctic.

At the extreme northern point of Alaska lives a tribe of Eskimos who are regarded as the greatest whale-hunters in the world.

The whales are hunted in May and June, when the ice fields have broken up and swept southwards into the Behring Sea, and again in September, before winter seals the ocean with its impenetrable cap of ice.

The creatures enter the extreme northern waters when spring has driven the ice away, and remain until the ice returns.

At the beginning of the whaling season temporary camps, consisting of improvised shelters made from upturned boats or frames of sleds over which skins or paulins are stretched, are made on the ice fields. Fur robes form the floor.

Whale-hunting to the natives is much in the nature of a regatta, honors going to the boat which kills the first whale of the season. A successful hunt ensures a winter's supply of food for the entire village.

With sails hoisted to the wind, the boats set out, each carrying three or four hunters armed with rifles. When a whale is struck a flag is shown, and the other boats hurry to the spot in order to render assistance. A few of the whales have guns which shoot explosive harpoons. Others have rifles or spears, with markers and buoys of seal skins inflated with air.

When the whale is captured, the boats line out, sails up, one towing the other, the dead whale bringing up the rear. The whale has to be cut up in the water when land is reached, because there are not enough men to drag the great carcass up on shore.

At the end of the whaling season each successful hunter gives a Na-lu-ka-tak (celebration). There are feasting, blanket tossing, and a dance at the end of the program, which lasts for several days.

DAUGHTER HAD TO HELP MOTHER

Now Can Do All Her Housework Alone Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Jasper, Minn. — "I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took it because I was having such pains in my stomach and through my back that I could not do my work. I had tried other medicines, but none did me the good that your Vegetable Compound did. Now I am able to do all my work alone while before I had my daughter staying at home to do it. I have told a number of friends what it has done for me and give you permission to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. Jesse Fetterley, Route 1, Jasper, Minn.

There is no better reason for your trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound than this—it has helped other women. So if you suffer from displacements, irregularities, backache, nervousness or are passing through the Change of Life remember this splendid medicine. What it did for Mrs. Petersen it may do for you.

The Vegetable Compound stands upon a foundation of nearly fifty years of service.

A Deserved Diploma--Certificate of Health

Miss M— lived in the Ottawa Valley, not far from the capital, with her mother and young sister. Work seemed the natural thing when she left school, and accordingly, she started out to get what she could for her services. Progress was not fast, but at least she did not stand still, and her earnings were always increasing.

With such prospects it seemed that her little sister could get the chance that she had been denied—University education. The baby of the family went to Queen's, and this year her alma mater gives her the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Next year she's going to do better—Master of Arts. But here's where the sadness comes in. The elder sister, broken in health by overwork, is no longer able to assist. She is a patient at the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives, but it is hoped that she too will shortly graduate—with "A Certificate of Good Health."

Seventeen thousand patients have been cared for by the National Sanitarium Association in its hospitals in Muskoka and at Weston. Half of them have been restored to health and happy homes. You can share in this great work if you will.

Contributions may be sent to Hon. Geo. Charlton, 223 College Street, Toronto.

"Woman's Greatest Sin."

At the Strand theatre, on Thursday, November 16th, was greeted by a packed house and was thoroughly enjoyed by every one who witnessed the performance, and on behalf of the management of the Strand we wish to thank all those who came. The story of the play dealt with the life of young girls who leave home and are led into the pitfalls by men who encourage them by money and fine clothes, and all kinds of luxuries, suppers and theatre parties. Mothers, those of you who did not see this play at The Strand, it was the biggest disappointment that you ever missed. In presenting this play Mr. Aisten certainly picked out a play with a moral. Miss Madeline George, as Anna Wakefield, played her part to the best of her ability. The others in the cast were splendid support to Miss George. Woman's Greatest Sin brought a lesson that should be a warning to all mothers and grown up girls of any town or city who leave home to seek the pleasures of the world, only to be led astray by men, money and fine clothes. Thus "Woman's Greatest Sin" is a play in a class by itself.

A Complete Library for $2.00.

The Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal has for over half a century devoted itself chiefly to the interests of the Dominion and of the farming population. It gives more space to agricultural matters than does any other Canadian farm journal. In addition it furnishes with its carefully selected stories for general reading, includes a regular magazine for young people, several pages devoted to women's interests, furnishes a trained qualified doctor, lawyers for each of the Provinces, veterinary surgeons for each division of live stock, analysts for mineral specimens, entomologists for insect pests and their friends, naturalists for bird and animal study, photographic specialist for camera work, a wireless engineer for radio experiments, in fact experts in every line of interest to country dwellers. If there is anything in this world a journal which tries so successfully to cover the whole range of a Canadian family's needs, it has not made itself known as yet. No home can afford to be without this independent, valuable, encyclopedic journal. The subscription price of the Family Herald and Weekly Star is only $2.00 per year.

David Platt was quite lucky enough to kill a large bear.

We have enjoyed an ideal Indian summer this season. Farmers are still plowing and cattle and sheep in the pasture fields.

The barn and some buildings on the farm owned by R. Edwards but occupied by his son-in-law, John Both, were last Monday morning, with all contents, destroyed by fire. Fortunately, owing to the mild weather, all live stock had been left in the pasture fields that night and had not been stabled, or the loss would have been still greater. The origin of the fire is still a mystery. About four o'clock a.m., some parties passed not far from the premises on their way to Renfrew and did not notice any signs of fire, and not long after Mr. and Mrs. Both were awakened by the noise of the flames and the falling of the remains of the burning buildings. Mr. Edwards carries a light insurance on the buildings, but Mr. Boths' contents were not insured and his loss is a serious one.

FIRE MANIAC ACTIVE

Threatens Life and Property in City of London.

Seven Serious Conflagrations Traced to His Agency With Thousands of Dollars' Loss — Latest Crime Almost Claimed Lives of Entire Family of Five People.

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 20. — Seven midnight fires, which have caused an actual property loss of $150,000, imperilled properties worth millions, and, in the most recent instance, murderously menaced the lives of five men, women and children sleeping in a top-floor flat in the downtown business section, were laid to-day at the door of a fire maniac by Deputy Provincial Fire Marshal Ponton. Fire Chief John Aitken and police officials.

Friday night's fire in which between $30,000 and $40,000 damage was caused to a building within a hundred feet of London's principal intersection, Dundas and Richmond streets, was the cause of an emergency summons of the Fire Marshal to the city. His operations were not revealed until he had reported his findings.

Chief Aitken presented evidence to show that someone had entered the building through a public stairs off Dundas street, and had packed a pile of rags and paper, soaked with kerosene, against a board partition and directly under a large gas meter and the whole pressure of the large supply pipe, thus released, sent long tongues of flame licking through the corridors and up the stairs to the third storey, where Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lane, their two children, and a roomer, H. S. Hensal, were sleeping. The shouts of William Moore, a bond dealer, who discovered the fire, awakened the occupants of the flat, who were still sleeping, though the rooms were filled with choking smoke and fumes. Escape by the stairs had already been cut off, but they were able to grope their way to a rear exit and make their way to a vacant space behind the block of stores, clad only in their night clothes.

The fire caused serious damage to Casselman's shoe store, Peter's confectionery, United Cigar Store and Chinese in those buildings, but its spread to more serious proportions was prevented by the prompt response of all city apparatus to a general alarm.

Chief Aitken showed that the operations of the fire maniac were first revealed some weeks ago when three separate fires were started in the auditorium of the old East London Town Hall, No. 2 company, quartered in the same building extinguished the flames which were seen flickering through the upper windows. Floors, doors and walls at three separate places had been fired with bundles of oil soaked materials, the remains of which were secured as evidence by the firemen. The next fire known to have been of incendiary origin was that which destroyed the Jubilee Ice rink, with two small cottages on adjoining property. The huge wooden building burned fiercely and several times fired the street car barns on the opposite side of Lyle street. A dozen families were driven from their homes and the surrounding buildings and the East London business section were saved with great difficulty.

Soon afterward Sargeant's Lumber Mill was destroyed with a loss of $30,000 and the Globe Casket Plant was saved only after a serious fight. Less than a week elapsed before King Street Presbyterian Church, situated in the block between the rink and mill was scorched the night but the blaze failed to take hold and part of the evidence remained in the morning. A bale of oil-soaked waste from the burned box of a railway car had been wrapped in a newspaper stamped with the name and office address of Supt. Charles Forrester, of the Grand Trunk. The paper had been carried out with other rubbish and was evidently taken by the maniac from a rubbish incinerator opposite the city depot.

During the past three weeks the man has shifted operations from East London to the heart of the business district, and by similar means he has attempted at different times to burn the Grand Theatre, the Universal Hat and Cap factory and the building attacked on Friday last. There is also a suspicion, though less certain, that the Dominion Abattoir, recently destroyed with a loss of $75,000, was deliberately fired.

Chief Aitken branded the latest case as "murderous," and questions of downtown flats have been warned to observe all precautions until the miscreant is rounded up.

Communists Loot Stores.

DESDEN, Nov. 20. — Three thousand unemployed, singing the communist international, broke into here Saturday, looting food and clothing stores, blocking street cars and pursuing citizens wearing white caps and other citizens wearing the white colors.

Many windows were smashed and banks, department stores and many large cafes pulled down their blinds and closed for the day. The mob also took a threatening attitude toward foreigners living at Europaischer Hof and strong police reinforcements were required to prevent them from storming the hotel entrance.

Finally mounted police succeeded in dispersing the angry crowd. Many persons were reported to have been injured, but no one was killed.

WAS SPY DURING WAR

Windsor Man Makes Strange Confession.

Alexander H. May, Engineer, Who Disappeared Some Time Ago, Writes to His Wife From Berlin—Mystery Surrounds Him, Though He Served With Lord Kitchener In India.

WINDSOR, Nov. 20. — Alexander Harvey May, prominent consulting engineer, who disappeared about two months ago, in a letter to his wife written from Berlin, Germany, confessed to having led a life of deception while residing in Canada and the United States, acting as an agent for the German Government. Information contained in the letter indicates that owing to the tightening of the intelligence departments he was obliged to return to Germany. Friends of the whereabouts of Alexander May unwinds a skein of mystery which has surrounded the affair for weeks and caused an unprecedented stir in local business circles.

"I have led a life of deception and you have been too good a wife for me. You are my only love and knowing how you hate a deceiver, and realizing that this deception would be revealed to you eventually, I decided to resort to this way of leaving."

These are passages said to feature the letter to his wife which marks the first communication ever received since he suddenly deserted her.

Mrs. May, who is now in the throes of a financial quandary due to her husband's disappearance and alleged activities, was stricken with grief when the letter reached her.

Alex. May married his wife, a former St. Louis, Mo., girl, nearly nine years ago and at that time, his friends state, his devotion to her was unexcelled, so great that a child was adopted by him.

May had a checkered and varied military career for many years, during which time he served in the British army under Lord Kitchener in India. For services rendered during that campaign he was presented with a Knights Templar charm, studded with diamonds, by Lord Kitchener personally. This charm also bore the great war lord's own crest and initials. Mr. May's travels with the military carried him into many corners of the world, friends state. He served in Japan and China, and it was while serving in the latter country that the presentation of the diamond studded charm was made. In the Hong Kong perceptory, Knights Templar. May was in possession of that token when he disappeared from Windsor.

He served 19 months in the United States army during the war as a special agent in Germany and this record only serves to baffle friends here as to how and why he managed to cover up his tracks in the capacity, as it is alleged, of a German agent while in the United States and Canada.

It was always a personal boast made by May that prior to his work in Germany for the United States Government he was responsible for the running down of a huge wireless station in the old Sayville station operated by a gang of Germans. The veracity of this statement, however, his acquaintances state, has never been confirmed, and they believe that it was merely another blind on his part to camouflage his activities under the cloak of heroism.

While in Windsor May was works engineer for a product company at Walkerville, and at the time of his disappearance was in business for himself as a consulting engineer. As a member of the Kiwanis Club, his character was considered unimpeachable and he was believed to be one of the community's most outstanding professional men.

TELLER FOILED BANDIT.

Unsuccessful Attempt to Rob Montreal Bank.

MONTREAL, Nov. 20.—Quick action on the part of C. H. Morrow, formerly of Parry Sound, paying teller of the Sterling Bank, 120 St. James street, frustrated the efforts of a bandit on Saturday morning to obtain a thousand dollars at the point of a revolver. Morrow turned the tables so quickly that the bandit fled without getting a cent. He was almost caught by a police officer, but just managed to evade the latter in the crowd on St. James street. The only damage was from two shots, the bullets from which smashed a plate-glass window and lodged in the wall near the ceiling of the bank premises.

Stepping up to the wicket of the paying teller's care about 11.15 in the morning, a man afterwards described as short, stout and dark, and wearing blue glasses, presented for payment an old and crumpled blank cheque. On it was written: "If you make one move or shout before I get to the door, I will shoot to kill. Give me a hundred tens." He pointed a revolver at Morrow, the weapon being wrapped in a handkerchief, only the end of the muzzle showing.

Morrow said: "I have not got that many tens here, but I have the amount in ones and twos."

"Give me those," said the bandit, in a low voice.

Morrow began counting the bills and when he saw that the bandit's attention was directed to the pile of bills, he dropped suddenly behind his counter. He shot from the revolver and, again facing the bandit, fired two shots.

CLEMENCEAU IN AMERICA.

Tiger of France Has Arrived In New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—M. Clemenceau, "the Tiger of France," has arrived in America. He came in good health and in high expectations, but despite the many hard battles which he has fought during his long public life in the service of his country, now after he has retired from the political arena he faces the hardest fight of them all; and that in a new land among strangers. Although he explained that his visit is purely a personal one and that he is on no mission, it is generally accepted that the "Tiger" comes to win a pro-Franco sentiment in America and that he will do everything possible to place France's stand in a light that will win for it a favorable view in the United States. Just what success he may have remains to be seen, but M. Clemenceau did not win his appellation of the "Tiger" for nothing. He is a fighter and he will fight hard to achieve his end.

To newspapermen who attempted to interview him M. Clemenceau said that he was prepared to respond with certain number of yeses and an equal number of noes which the reporters could distribute in their copy, they say that M. Clemenceau attended the performance of "Mephistopheles" Sunday afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera House, where he will deliver a lecture Tuesday night. His chief purpose in attending the opera will be to get a line on the qualities of the singers who will furnish the music at his address and is anxious for all his audience to hear him but that he could not scream.

Robert W. Bliss, Assistant Secretary of State, named by the former Premier to the United States on behalf of President Harding and invited him to visit the President at Washington, Clemenceau accepted.

M. Clemenceau, responding to the public welcome said:

"For fifty years I have been mixed up with the most political crises in France. I have seen my country invaded twice during my lifetime. I do not want to see a third invasion before my death.

"We will disperse our army when it can be shown that we are safe from this invasion."

Blizzard on Lake Superior.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Nov. 20.—The steamer North Sea, bound down, hit an obstruction in the Canadian channel, punching a hole in her starboard bow. The drill boats and sweepers have been widening the channel, which has been marked with temporary buoys, and it is believed the North Sea lost her bearings during the thick snowstorm that prevailed all day, and got outside of the marks.

The Kearsarge, upbound, struck a rock with her wheel while trying to make the Detour coal dock. One flange of the propeller was broken off. She proceeded to Lime Island, where repairs will be make.

Practically all upbound steamers have come to anchor above Point aux Pins, in upper St. Mary's river, owing to the blizzard.

Seized Galli-Curci's Fee.

OTTAWA, Nov. 20. — Madame Galli-Curci, who sang for a local theater on Wednesday evening, had her share of the gate receipts seized by Federal Inland Revenue officers for failing to pay income tax on previous concerts held in Canada. The famous singer attended here on a 70 per cent. gate receipts basis, and her share exceeded $2,000. Every cent of this amount was seized, Madame Galli-Curci has been singing in different parts of the Dominion for the past two years without paying any Federal income tax. All her earnings in Canada are subject to taxation, income tax officials state.

That the singer had anticipated such a move by the Federal authorities on this occasion is evident, as she was accompanied by her own car from New York. After investigating, however, he found that the singer had no redress from the seizure.

Bodies Found In Slough.

REGINA, Nov. 20.—The dead bodies of Steve Gulan and Nick Bouzayzyn, aged seven, nine and eleven years, respectively, sons of John Dzieszyzyn, a Mennonite farmer, were found in a slough a few miles east of Veregin, Sask., Friday by neighbors, who had been searching for the children since they were reported missing the day previous. Wallet and details are lacking, it is presumed the boys were playing on a thin crust of ice that covered the slough, when the ice broke and they were drowned.

Friday morning the bodies were found under the ice, huddled together. Apparently they were on the edge of the ice when it broke, and they grasped each other in a struggle to reach safety.

Shot Himself Dead.

REGINA, Nov. 20. — On Thursday morning, after firing three rifle shots at his little daughter, Mrs. Ella, one of which penetrated the back of her head, George J. Ibdd, a farmer near Penzance, Sask., placed the muzzle of the rifle in his mouth and pulled the trigger a fourth time. He died in a few minutes. The girl was taken to Regina General Hospital, where the bullet was extracted, and she is now making favorable progress toward recovery.

Used Gun as Rake.

AYR, Ont., Nov. 20.—Early Saturday morning Leslie Bricker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bricker, of Washington, Ont., eight miles south-west of Ayr, shot and killed himself while hunting squirrels. Deceased had left home between seven and eight o'clock in the morning and did not return. The family waited and sent to the nearby bush to look for him, and found him about nine in the morning. Mr. Bricker had taken a rake with him, and fell from the tree on the opposite side of the fence. He evidently had tried to drag the squirrel through the fence with the end of his gun, holding on to the barrel. The trigger, not being at safety, caught on the fence and the gun discharged its load, conveying the shot into his body. He was found at that spot by the fence and doctors say death came instantly and that he had been lying there from a half to three-quarters of an hour before being found.

Leslie Bricker was 22 years of age and lived with his parents.

NEW CALIPH ELECTED.

Abdul Medjid Efendi Is Cultured Man of Letters.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 20.—Crown Prince Abdul Medjid Effendi, cousin of Sultan Mohammed VI., was elected Caliph by the Great National Assembly of Turkey on Saturday, and will be inducted into office at the Topeapou Palace.

Angora probably will be the seat of the caliphate until the foreign occupation of Constantinople ceases.

Abdul Medjid Efendi was born in 1868.

In a message to Rafet Pasha, Nationalist Governor of Constantinople, the Angora Government expresses its inability to understand the reason for the Sultan's flight inasmuch as the great National Assembly of Turkey, while voting for abolition of his temporal power, contributed to recognize Mohammed VI. as Caliph until the election of a successor. The Angora message, as outlined in a Constantinople despatch, instructs Rafet Pasha to supply details on the flight.

Abdul Medjid received 148 votes out of a total of 163. The new caliph telegraphed his acceptance, reserving certain limited temporal powers.

Abdul is the son of Sultan Abdul Aziz and is 54 years old. He is described as learned in letters and literature, a patron of arts, an accomplished painter and composer of music for many years closely identified with the nationalist movement and is credited with a strong will. Friends say he will not be content to remain merely as religious head of Islam, but will insist upon exercising temporal powers.

Unlike most Turks, he has only one wife, and lives moderately and quietly, not mingling in politics. He has a daughter and a son, the latter married to a daughter of Mohammed VI., the deposed Sultan.

Cardinal Mercer Ill.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 20. — Cardinal Mercer, Primate of Belgium, is ill. He is suffering from a mild case of influenza, which in itself is not considered by the attending physicians as alarming, but there is some fear by them of complications which, on account of the age of the prelate, might give his case a more serious turn.

The cardinal caught a cold at the ceremony of entombing Belgium's unknown soldier on November 11 and was forced to take to bed the following day.

STRAND

The STRANGE CASE of CAVENDISH

By RANDALL PARRISH

AUTHOR OF "THE DEVIL'S OWN" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" ETC.

COPYRIGHT BY RANDALL PARRISH

The lawyer's face whitened and his hands gripped the arm of his chair.

"You—you know me?"

"A reputation only," and Westcott bowed, "but that is scarcely to your credit. Now, Lacy and I have got a little affair to settle between us and, being a fair-minded man, he sent for me to talk it over. However, he realizes that an argument of that nature might easily become personal and that if anything unpleasant occurred he would require a witness. So he arranges to have you present. Do you see the point, Mr. Enright?"

The lawyer's eyes sought Lacy, and then returned to the stern face confronting him. His lips sputtered:

"As—as a witness?"

"Sure; there may be honor among thieves, but not Lacy's kind." He strode forward and with one hand crushed Enright back into his chair. "Now, listen to me," he said fiercely. "I've got only one word of advice for you: don't take any hand in this affair, except as a peacemaker, for if you do you are going to get hurt. Now, I came to ask you a question and one at you two are going to answer before I leave—keep your hands up, and in sight, Lacy; make another move like that and it's liable to be your last. I am not here in any playful mood, and I know your style. Lay that gun on the desk where I can see it—that's right. Now move your chair back."

Lacy did this with no good grace, his face purple with passion. "Some considerable gun-play just to ask a question," he said tauntingly, "must be mighty important. All right, what is it?"

"Where did your man Moore take Miss Donovan last night?"

Neither man had anticipated this; neither had the slightest conception that any suspicion of this kind pointed to them. The direct question was like the sudden explosion of a bomb. What did Westcott know? Enright had not discovered their participation in the affair?

"You have rather got the better of me, Westcott," Lacy said, shrugging his shoulders, as though dismissing the subject. "You refer to the New York newspaper woman?"

"I do—Miss Stella Donovan."

"I have not the pleasure of that lady's acquaintance, but Timmons informed me this morning that she had taken the late train last night for the East—isn't that true, Enright?"

The lawyer managed to nod, but without venturing to remove his gaze from Westcott's face. The latter never moved, but his eyes seemed to harden.

"I have had quite enough of that, Lacy," he said sternly, and the watchful saloon keeper noted his fingers close more tightly on the butt of his revolver. "This is no case for an alibi. I know exactly what I am talking about, and—I am going to have a direct answer, either from you or Enright."

"This is the situation: I was the man listening at the window of your shack last night. Moore may, or may not have recognized me, but, nevertheless, I was the man. I was there long enough to overhear a large part of your conversation. I know why you consented to close down La Rosita for the present; I know your connection with this gang of crooks from New York; I know that Fred Cavendish was not murdered, but is being held a prisoner somewhere, until Enright, here, can steal his money under some legal form. Enright sold you who Stella Donovan was, and what he suspected her object might be. Force is the only method you know anything about, and no other means occurred to you whereby the girl could be quickly put out of the way. This was resorted to last night after you returned to Haskell."

"You are a good dreamer. Why not ask Timmons to show you the letter she left?"

"I have already seen it. You thought you had the mail well covered. That note was written not by Miss Donovan, but by the blonde in your outfit. The whole trouble is that your abduction of Stella was witnessed from a back window of the hotel."

Lacy leaped to his feet, but Westcott's gun rose steadily, and the man stood with clenched hands, helpless in his tracks.

"I'll get you for this, Westcott," he muttered savagely, hate burning in his eyes. "I haven't played my last cards —yet."

The miner smiled grimly, but with no relaxation of vigilance. He was into it now, and proposed seeing it through.

"I have a few left myself," he returned soberly. "Your man Moore drove south, taking the road leading into the Shoshone desert, and he had another one of your gang with him. Then you, and two others, went back into the hotel, using the outside stairs. I take it the two others were Enright, here, and Ned Beaton."

He leaned forward, his face set like flint.

"Now see here, Lacy, I know these things. It is up to you to answer my questions, and answer them straight, I've got you two fellows dead to rights anyway you look at it. If you dare lay hands on me, I'll kill you, if you refuse to tell me what I want to know, I'll swear out warrants inside of thirty minutes. Now, what do you choose?"

"If I answer—what then?" Lacy growled desperately. "What is offered me?"

Westcott moistened his lips. He had not before faced the situation from this standpoint, yet, with only one thought in mind, he answered promptly.

"I am not the law," he said, "and all I am interested in now is the release of Fred Cavendish and Stella Donovan. I'll accomplish that if it has to be over your dead bodies. Beyond this, I wash my hands of the whole affair. What I want to know is—where are these two?"

"Would you believe me if I said I did not know?"

"No, Lacy. It has come down to the truth, or your life. Where is Pascual Mendez?"

He heard no warning, no sound or movement, yet some change in the expression of the man's eyes confronting him caused him to slightly turn his head so as to vaguely perceive a shadow behind. It was all so quickly, silently done, he barely had time to throw up one hand in defense, when his arms were gripped as though in a vise, and he was thrown backward to the floor, the chair crushed beneath his weight. Lacy fairly leaped on his prostrate body, forgetting his gun lying on the table in the violence of hate, his hands clutching at the exposed throat. For an instant Westcott was so dazed and stunned by this sudden attack from behind as to lie there prone and helpless, fairly crushed beneath the bodies of his two antagonists.

It was this that gave him his chance, for, convinced that he was unconscious, both men slightly relaxed their grip, thus giving him opportunity to regain breath, and stiffen his muscles for a supreme effort. With one lashing out of a foot that sent Enright hurtling against the farther wall, he cracked Lacy's head against a corner of the desk, and closed in deadly struggle with the third man, whom he now recognized as Benton.

Before the latter could comprehend what had happened the miner was on top, and a clenched fist was driven into his face with all the force of a sledge-hammer. But barroom fighting was no novelty to the gunman, nor had he any scruples as to the methods employed. With teeth sunk into his opponent's arm, and fingers gouging at his eyes, the fellow struggled like a mad dog; yet, in spite of every effort to restrain him, Westcott, now filled with the fierce rage of battle, broke free, fairly tearing himself from Benton's desperate clutch, and pinning him helplessly against the wall.

Pinning Him Helplessly Against the Wall.

At the same instant Lacy, who had regained his feet, leaped upon him from behind, striking him with all his force, the violence of the blow, even though a grazing one, driving the miner's head into the face of the gunman.

Both went down together, but Westcott was on his feet again before Lacy could act, closing with the latter. It was hand-to-hand, the silent struggle for mastery between two men not unevenly matched, men asking and receiving no mercy. The revolver of one lay on the floor, the other still reposed on the open desk, and neither could be reached. It was a battle to be fought out with bare hands. Twice Westcott struck, his clenched fist bringing blood, but Lacy clung to him, one hand twisted in his neck-band, the other viciously forcing back his head. Unable to release the grip, Westcott gave back, bending until his adversary was beyond balance; then, suddenly straightening, hurled the fellow sideways. But by now Benton, dazed and confused, was upon his feet. With the bellow of a wild bull he flung himself on the struggling men, forcing Lacy aside, and smashing into Westcott with all the strength of his body. The impetus sent all three crashing to the floor.

Excited voices sounded without; then blows resounded against the wood of the locked door, but the three men were oblivious to all but their own struggle. Like so many wild beasts they clutched and struck, unable to disentangle themselves. Enright, his face like chalk, got to his knees and crept across the floor until his hand closed on Westcott's revolver. Lifting himself by a grip on the desk, he swung the weapon forward at the very instant the miner rose staggering, dragging Beaton with him. There was a flash of flame, a sharp report, and Westcott sprang aside, gripping the back of a chair. The gunman sank into shapelessness on the floor as the chair hurtled through the air straight at Enright's head.

With a crash the door fell, and a black mass of men surged in through the opening, the bartender leading them, an axe in his hand. Beaton lay motionless just as he had dropped; Enright was in one corner, dazed, unnerved, a red gash across his forehead, from which blood dripped, the revolver, struck from his fingers, yet smoking on the floor; Westcott, his clothes torn, his face bruised by blows, breathing heavily, went slowly backward, step by step, to the farther wall, conscious of nothing now but the savagely hostile faces of these new enemies. Lacy, staggering as though drunk, managed to attain his feet, hate, desire for revenge, yielding him strength. This was his crowd, and his mind was quick to grasp the opportunity.

"There's the man who did it," he shouted, his arm flung out toward Westcott. "I saw him shoot. See, that's his gun lying on the floor. Don't let the murderer get away!"

He started forward, an oath on his lips, and the excited crowd surged after, growling anger. Then the mass of them seemed suddenly rent asunder, and the marshal plowed his way through heedlessly, his face gone, and a blue-barreled gun in either hand. He swept the muzzle of one of these into the bartender's face menacingly, his eyes searching the maddened crowd.

"Wait a minute, you," he commanded sharply. "I reckon I've got something to say 'bout this. Put down that axe, Mike, or ye'll never draw another glass o' beer in this camp. You know me, lads, an' I never draw for fun or business. Shut your mouth, Lacy; don't touch that gun, you fool! I am in charge here—this is my job; and it there is going to be any lynching done, it will be after you get me. Stand back, now! all of you—now get out into that barroom. I mean you, Mike! This man is my prisoner, and I'll defend him. Ay! I'll do more, I'll let him defend himself. Here, Westcott, pick up your gun and stand by me. Now, stand here with me! We're going out through that bunch, and if one of those coyotes puts a paw on you, let him have it!"

The crowd made way, reluctantly enough, growling curses, but with no man among them sufficiently reckless to attempt resistance. They lacked leadership, for the little marshal never once took his eye off Lacy. At the door he turned, walking backward, trusting in Westcott to keep their path clear, both leveled revolvers ready for any movement.

He had but one object before him—to get his prisoner safely outside into the open. Beyond that he would trust to luck, and a fair chance. His grey eyes were almost black as they gleamed over the leveled revolver barrels, and his clipped mustache fairly bristled.

They were far from free even outside the swinging doors and in the sunshine. Already a rumor of what had occurred had spread like wildfire, and men were on the street in force enough to take some hand in the affray. A few were already about the steps, while others were running rapidly toward them, excited, but uncertain.

It was this uncertainty which gave the little marshal his one slender chance. His eyes swept the crowd, but there was no face visible on whom he could rely in this emergency. There was scarcely an instant of hesitancy, his quick searching eyes surveying the scene, and then seeking the face of his prisoner.

"Willing to fight this out, Jim?" he asked shortly.

"You bet, Dan; what's the plan?"

"The big rock in Bear creek. We can hold out there until dark. Perhaps there'll be some men to help us by that time; if not, we might crawl away in the night. Are you ready and fit to run at the hotel. Don't let anybody stop you. Christopher Columbus, I hate to run from such cattle, but it's our only chance."

There was no time to waste. They were not yet at the mouth of the alley when the infuriated pursuers burst through the saloon doors, cursing and shouting.

There were a dozen shots, but the two runners plunged about the corner of the building and disappeared, apparently untouched. Twice they turned and fired, yet at that, hardly paused in their race. Westcott held back, retarded by the shorter legs of his companion, nevertheless they were fully a hundred feet in advance of their pursuers when they reached the hotel. In spite of Lacy's urging the cowardly crew exhibited small desire to close in. The latter, clutching back over his shoulder, grinned cheerfully.

"We've got 'em beat, Jim," he panted, "less than's others headin' us off; run like a white-head; don't mind me."

The road ahead was clear, except for the speeding cowboys, and the marshal made extremely quick work of them. There was a fusillade of shots, and when these ended, one rider was down in the dust, the other galloping madly away, lying flat on his pony, ing to his right to keep his feet; he heard the marshal splashing along behind, convinced by his ceaseless profanity that he also made progress in spite of his shortness of limbs. Indeed, they attained the rock shelter almost together, creeping up through a narrow crevasse, leaving a wet trail along the grey stone. This was accomplished none too soon, a yell from the bank telling of their discovery, followed by the crack of a gun. The marshal, who was still exposed, hastily crept under cover, wiping a drop of blood from his cheek, where a splinter of rock dislodged by the bullet had slashed the flesh. He was, nevertheless, in excellent humor, his keen grey eyes laughing as he peered out over the rock rampart.

"If they keep up shootin' like that, Jim, I reckon our insurance won't be high," he said. "I'm plumb ashamed of the camp, the way them boys waste lead. Hand over them cartridges; let's see what sorter stock we got."

CHAPTER X.

The Rock in the Stream.

Westcott was sensible now of a feeling of intense exhaustion. The fierce fighting in the room behind the saloon; the excitement of the attempt to escape; the chase, ending with the plunge through the stream had left him pitifully weak. The marshal noticed it, and cast a swift glance into the other's face.

"About all in, Jim?" he inquired understandingly. "Little out of your line, I reckon. Take a bit o' rest that, an' you'll be all right. It's safe 'nough fer now with no purpose but to get out of range. The two fugitives plunged into the bushes opposite, taking the roughest but most direct course to where the rather precipitous banks dropped off to the stream below. The marshal, pausing for nothing, flung himself bodily down the steep bank, unclasping his belt, as he half ran, half rolled to the bottom.

"Here, take these cartridges," he said, "and hold 'em up. Save yer own, too, fer we're going to need 'em. That water ain't fit to drink, but I don't aim to mix up in no scrimmage as long as both sides has got a fair show. Course thar was three ag'in' one, but arter you kicked the wind out o' the lawyer, the odds wasn't so bad, an' I never hated to see a man missing how the scrap came out. Holy smoke! but you sure put up some dandy fight, Jim. You had them two guys licked to a frazzle, when that Enright came back into play, an' crawled out on the floor an' picked up your gun. The fust thing I knew he had it, an' the next thing I knew he'd pulled the trigger. He meant it fer you, but Beaton got it."

"It was Enright, then, who fired the shot?"

"Sure, it was Enright; I saw him, but that didn't cut any ice after I got inside. Do you see? The whole affair was Lacy's gang; they do whatever he said. It was your gun that had the discharged cartridge; Bill was yellin' that you fired it, and Enright, o' course, would have backed him up to save his own hide. What was the row about—your mine?"

"Partly, but mostly another affair. The best thing I can do is tell you about it. What's going on up there?"

He pointed up the stream, and Brennan shaded his eyes to look, although careful to keep well under cover, confident that any movement would be observed from the shore. He gazed for some time before he seemed entirely satisfied.

"A bunch of the boys crossin' the old fork," he said quietly. "Goin' to picket the other bank, I reckon. There's likely to be some more comin' down the trail, quite way from the bridge. That's Lacy's idea—to starve us out."

"They seem quiet enough."

"There won't be any more fightin' unless we try to get away, I reckon. They know we are armed and can shoot. You better keep down, though, Jim, for they're sure a watchin' us all right, an' all Lacy cares about is to put you out of the way. He'd just as soon do it with a bullet as a rope. Go on with your story."

Westcott told it simply, but in full detail. The marshal listened quietly to the narrative, the quick action of his jaws alone betraying his interest, although he occasionally interposed a question. Except for Westcott's voice there was no sound, beyond the lapping of water against the rock, and no figures of men became visible along either bank. The party above had crossed the stream, and disappeared up a ravine, and nothing remained to indicate that these two were fugitives, fighting for their lives, and facing a desperate attempt in an effort to escape their pursuers. As the speaker finally concluded the silence was almost oppressive.

"How do yer suppose Bill Lacy got into the game?" asked Brennan, at last thoughtfully. "I don't put no sorter devilry beyond him, yer understand, but I don't quite see how he ever come to get mixed up in this yere New York mess."

"I'm just as much in the dark as you are, as to that," admitted Westcott doubtfully. "I am convinced, however, that Cavendish is still alive, and that another body strangely resembling him was found in New York apartments. According to Enright this was not part of their scheme, but merely an accident of which they took advantage. How true this is will never be known unless we can recover Cavendish, and hear his story. Now, if he is alive, where has he been concealed, and for what purpose? Another thing begins to loom up. The mere hiding of the man was all right so long as the conspirators were suspected. But now when they are aware that they are being followed, what is likely to happen? Will they become desperate enough to kill their victim, hoping thus to destroy every evidence of their crime? Will their vengeance also include Miss Donovan?"

"Not unless they can get you out of the way first," decided the marshal grimly. "That is Lacy's most important job—you are too dangerous to them now than the girl. That meeting today was prearranged, and Beaton was expected to land you. That was why he hid behind the curtain, but somethin' must 'a' gone wrong to make a false move; they never expected you to put up that sort o' fight, Jim, for nobody knew yer in this camp fer a fightin' man. But what's yer theory 'bout Cavendish? Let's leave the dead fightin' man, an' get down yer cases."

"I figure it out like this, Dan. I believe Fred got my telegram, and decided to come out here at once without telling anybody what his plans were. All he did was to make a will, so as to dispose of his property in case anything happened. His employing Enright for that job unfortunately put the whole thing in the hands of this crowd. They were ready to act, and they acted. Beaton must have taken the same train, and the two men got friendly; probably they never knew each other in New York, but, being from the same place, it was easy enough to strike up an acquaintance. What occurred on board is all guesswork, but a sudden blow at night, on an observation platform, at some desert station, is not impossible; or it might be sickness, and the two men left behind to see a physician. Here was where Lacy must have come in. He goes east occasionally, doesn't he?"

"Sure; come to think of it he was in New York 'bout three months ago on some cattle deal an' I heard he had an agent there sellin' wildcat mine' stock. There ain't no doubt in my mind but he knew some o' these fellers. They wouldn't 'a' planned this unless they had some cache fixed out yere in this country—that's plain as a wart on the nose. But what is it? I'll bet yer that if we ever find Cavendish, we'll find the girl along with him; an' what's more, that spot ain't liable ter be more'n fifty miles from Haskell."

"What makes you think that?"

"Cause this is Lacy's bailiwick, an' thar ain't no man knows this country better'n he does. Then, why should Enright an' his crowd come yere, unless that was a fact? They must have come for something that lawyer ain't yere on no minin' deal; an' no more has Benton been a-goin' round town for a month doin' nuthin' but drinkin' whisky. The whole blame outfit is right here in Haskell, and they wouldn't be if this wasn't headquarters. That's good common sense, ain't it? What made yer ask me 'bout Pascual Mendez this mornin'? You don't hook the Mexican up with this affair, do yer?"

"Sadie told me she heard Enright speak of him at breakfast; that was all she heard, just the name."

"Sadie! Oh, the red-headed waitress at Timmons', you mean? Big Thar's girl?"

"Yes; she was the one who saw Miss Donovan forced into the wagon, and driven off."

"And they took the old Shoshone trail, out past Hennessey's ranch?"

"So she described it. Does that mean anything?"

Brennan did not answer at once, sitting silent, his brows wrinkled, staring through a crevasse of the rock up the stream. Finally he grinned into the anxious face of the other.

"Danged if I know," he said drawlingly. "Maybe it does, and maybe again it don't. I was sorter puttin' this an' that together, I never got hold of much proof, but I have an inkpot a pile o' cattle out o' Villa Real, although why he should ever drive his cows there across the desert instead o' shippin' them he'e in Haskell or Taylorville, I never could understand. That's the principal reason I've got for thinkin' he an' Mendez are in cahoots, an' if they be, then the Mexican must have some kind o' a camp out there in the sand whar he hides between raids; though, damn it I know whar it can be." He paused reflectively. "It'll be like hunting a needle in the haystack, Jim, but I reckon you an' I'll have to get out that way, an' we might have luck enough to stumble onto the old devil."

Westcott changed his position, inadvertently bringing his head above the protection of the rock. Instantly there was a sharp report, and a speeding bullet grazed his hair, flattening out against the stone. The rapidity with which he ducked caused the marshal to laugh.

"Not-hurt, are you? No. That was a rifle; Mike isn't such a bad shot with that weapon. He's over there behind that tree—see the smoke? If the cuss pokes his head out, I'll try the virtue of this 45; it ought to carry that far. Hah! there he is; I made the bark fly, anyway."

The afternoon wore away slowly, the two men realizing more and more clearly the nature of the siege. Their only safety lay in the protection of the rocks, as they were now entirely surrounded, and fired upon from either bank the moment either raised a head. No attempt was made, however, to assault their position, nor did they often return the fire, desiring to preserve for future use their small supply of ammunition. Brennan remained watchful, but silent, brooding over his plans for the night, but Westcott became overpowered by fatigue and slept quickly for several hours.

The sun was already sinking behind the range of mountains when he finally aroused himself, and sat up. Brennan greeted him with a good-natured grin.

"Well, do you feel better, Jim?" he asked pleasantly. "Thought I'd let you sleep as long as I could, for we've got some job ahead of us. Sorry thar ain't no breakfast waitin', fer I wouldn't object ter a bit o' ham bone myself. I reckon if Lacy coops me up much longer he'll liable ter win his bet; I'm plumb near starved out already."

"I'm afraid they've got us, Dan."

"Oh, I don't know; leastwise I ain't put up no white flag yet. You're game fer a try at gettin' out o' yere, ain't yer, old man? I've sorter been reckonin' on yer."

"I'll take any chance there is," returned Westcott heartily, staring into the other's face. "Have you some plan?"

Want Big Dam.

The much frequented ocean way known as the Straits of Belle Isle, which bounds Labrador on the southeast, has been again of late the subject of serious discussion. It has been suggested that a dam nine miles long be built from Point Amour to Flowers Cove on the north Newfoundland shore, which would close off the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This, by shutting out the Arctic ice and the cold water of the Polar current, might considerably ameliorate the climate of all the land to the westward. The water is not deep, and the enterprise is in no way impossible. Scientists, however, very much doubt this result on the climate, for the outside ice seems not to penetrate far enough into the Gulf to alter the temperature much, although the formation of ice locally may be responsible for this.

A Good Place to go in Winter

1. Parliament Buildings, Victoria, B.C.
2. Golf may be played every day in the year.
3. Famous Malahat Drive, Vancouver Island.
4. Vancouver is a beautiful modern city.
5. Magnificent mountain scenery en route.

Nature has dealt most generously with Canada in respect to her climate. While in the East we have winter weather worthy of the name, with lots of snow, which nowadays proves an attraction to thousands who revel in the bracing winter atmosphere and enjoy our winter sports of tobogganing, skiing, skating, etc., there are many who seek a warmer clime. We have this in Canada also.

Within the last few years, thousands of our Canadian people have been making their annual winter pilgrimage to the Pacific Coast, many to avoid the rigors of winter, and many simply to indulge in a winter vacation.

Victoria and Vancouver, on our own Pacific Coast, offer ideal retreats. Here flowers bloom in winter, and the grass and trees are always green. South-westerly breezes prevail throughout the year, reaching the land warmed by their passage across the vast breadth of the Pacific, from whose waters on this coast have a temperature of 52 degrees.

In Victoria, 49 degrees has been the mean annual temperature for the last thirty years, while Vancouver is a little colder, but extremes in weather are never experienced. Golf and other outdoor sports may be engaged in all winter, while both cities have magnificent natural settings, and hundreds of miles of the finest roads on the continent invite motoring. You have the grandeur of mountain scenery, glorious seascapes, luxurious evergreen forests and invigorating sea air, with all the advantages to be found in a modern metropolis, for Victoria and Vancouver are two of the finest cities in the Dominion.

"The mountains en route through the Canadian Rockies are magnificent in their sombre winter dress—a fairyland of surpassing beauty. The Canadian National Railway passes through the mountains at the lowest altitude and easiest gradients of any transcontinental railway in America.

WHEN THE TIDE TURNED

OTTAWA GIRL WHO SEEMED DOOMED TO INVALIDISM.

Miss Lilian D. Milner, Who Won $500 Prize Offered for an Essay on "Personal Achievement," Has Had a Career That Reads Like a Page of Romance.

The life story of Miss Lilian D. Milner, of Ottawa, who won the $500 prize offered by a magazine for an essay on "Personal Achievement" reads like a fairy tale. Miss Milner came into the world with that greatest of all afflictions, a very frail body. Each phase of her history is one bit worse than the last; then, during what seemed the bitterest and most harrowing experience, when she was holding to life by a single weak thread, then the tide turned. Faith and indomitable will power overcame almost insurmountable objects, and not alone enabled her to recover a bit of health, but to win success and earn a livelihood as a writer. Of late there has come into her life a veritable Prince Charming, a medical man of great power to relieve her illness.

It is a long, weary way from the days when Lilian Milner was a factory hand in Liverpool to the successful writer and author, soon to be Prince Charming's bride.

Necessity obliged her to leave day school at the age of fifteen and work in a packing factory. Seven in the morning to six p.m. were the factory hours. She served in a shop until midnight and on Sundays to help pay board and lodging.

The Liverpool factory closed down and many a weary day that lengthened into weeks and months was spent in searching for work. Necessity forced her to take what she could find. Domestic service alone was available, and of this period she says: "I wasn't unhappy, but far too busy to analyze my feelings. I was tired all the time, and had a cough which I could not get rid of. One day I went to the doctor, who advised the country, fresh diet, complete rest and other impossible things."

At this time a letter arrived from friends in a Central Ontario town. They spoke of it as Dominion as the land of promise, where stenographic appointments were many and workers few. She came out to Canada, but in time to like her only friends depart for Vancouver, and soon learned that jobs were scarce. As next best, she worked in a hardware store. Then her future wife came in and induced her to go to the country, with the understanding she would receive $20 a month, with board and lodging, in return for household services. Things were represented in a very happy light.

It was a long after arriving at the miserable cabin and ill-kept surroundings called the farm, that Miss Milner realized she had fallen into the hands of a querulous, lazy people. The family, five in number and all grown-ups, left their heaviest work to her.

Chopping and drawing wood from a neighboring clearing, feeding cattle and watering them, supplying the water for laundry work and house use all year round, fell to her lot. To get water in winter time the ice in the creek had to be chopped, and as long as she gives her ears and hands will bear testimony to this last terrible ordeal. Large washings and ironings were done at night by lantern light in a ripirable shed. The farm was two miles from the village and post office, yet never once did she have the opportunity of going there, nor did she ever receive one cent of the promised wage.

The inhuman treatment had slowly sapped her small store of strength; diet from cattle fodder had aggravated the cough. Under similar conditions a hired girl died on an adjoining farm and neighbors, when hearing that no doctor had been called, had caused the girl a great deal of trouble. Fearing a repetition, the farmer in Miss Milner's case called a doctor. It took the medical man just a few minutes to tell the people what he thought of their inhuman treatment and removing a very sick young woman to a neighboring house. Eventually she was taken to Ottawa.

For two years she lay in a hospital; two years that, despite suffering and restlessness, were used to read, and to refresh the stenography now grown rusty. Finally she wrote her first article, an essay on "The Secret of Success." This was completed a few times at a time, as she was too weak to stand at it longer. The essay sold and was published, and right here was made a resolution that she would get better if only to be a writer. The resolution went into effect long before the business of getting better.

Recovering enough to leave the hospital she took temporary work in a small store, studying all the while for civil service examinations, and later passed several in the Dominion. The award was a splendid secretarial position. Unfortunately, illness returned, more virulent this time. Long months passed by and there were no signs of recovery, then doctors decided she must go to a hospital for incurables. Hearing of this, Miss Milner decided that too long she had remained in the depressing atmosphere of the sanitarium.

Sheer will power enable her to rise and depart, and kind friends took her to their country home. In these happy surroundings her health improved and there was time to write again. This time the undertook children's stories and they were a decided success. At this time also she commenced writing from a farm woman's viewpoint.

Miss Milner says that she has sold practically everything she has ever written, and during the past few years, has been free of comparative luxury. There are still times of pain and sickness of sleeplessness. These are mercifully growing less, and then has not Prince Charming, with his skill and care, promised to cure her?

Will Control the Borer.

The Ohio Farmer reports that the corn-borer has been found in noticeable numbers in only one county in Ohio, and even there it does not appear to be a serious pest. The Farmer further states that in the United States there is a natural enemy of the borer that is already destroying 90 per cent. of the eggs laid by this pest of the corn crop.

If that statement is well founded, it looks as though the danger from the depredation of a dangerous pest than there is in all the efforts of Government officials.

THE LONGED-FOR APPLE

Rosy Cheeked, Thick Skinned and Well Flavored.

Fruit Eaters Will Welcome It — It May Be Growing To-day In Some Ontario Farmer Row—Running an Egg Factory.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Somewhere on a farm in the apple growing districts of Ontario there are rosy red seedling apples. Seedling apples that may have characters that would make them valuable commercial sorts, if such could be introduced to the public. True, there are thousands of worthless seedlings, but some fence row or orchard area is now growing a tree or trees that produce a superior fruit.

Box Packing Apples at a Premium.

Ontario needs an apple suited to box packing, and it may be from an unnamed seedling that such want will be supplied. If those having really good seedling apples would bring them to light so that their qualities might be judged by those competent to do so, an apple worth while might be named and introduced to the public. Western apples shipped in boxes have invaded the Ontario market because of their color and shipping quality. The bright red color attracts the buyer and the thick skin preserves the good appearance of the individual.

Thick Skins Most Desirable.

Thin skinned Ontario varieties will not stand the shipping and trade exposure in the retail stores to the same degree as the thicker skinned apples. Western apples may go punky and become unfit for use, but still look well, as the exterior skin will remain glossy. Provide a good box pack apple, something rosy red, of good quality, and a good thick protective coat.

Where, In Where, Is It To-day?

Perhaps somewhere in a fence row such an apple may now be found. Who knows. What have you? — L. Stewart, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

RUNNING AN EGG FACTORY.

Valuable Hints as to How to Make the Best of the Hen.

Every flock of hens is an egg factory. Like any other factory the flock can be run in the best methods that the world to work on and still fail to produce enough to pay for running the plant. Good feed in sufficient quantity and variety for egg production, but the ability to manufacture eggs from feed must be there first.

It pays to cull out the poor layers any time, to save the feed and labor they cost, but to make a profit on them it is best to cull in the autumn or early fall, before the rush of spring chickens lowers the market price of old hens.

Shut up all the hens and pullets some evening. Count them and decide just how many can be readily kept during the coming year without crowding, for this is very likely to hurt egg production and increase the danger of disease. The next morning the flock is ready to be culled.

Cull

1. Poor layers and all old hens.
2. Cripples, and hens with broken-down abdomens or frozen toes.
3. The sick, quiet, inactive hens that spend much time on the roost.
4. All "crow heads" with long, slim heads and beaks.
5. The large, coarse-headed hens with sunken eyes.
6. All very short, stubby hens with feathers extremely heavy for their breed.
7. All late-hatched immature pullets and those that are early hatched but much undersized.
8. All hens that molt before August 1.
9. The persistent sitter.
10. All hens with solid, fat abdomens.

'11. All hens having bad habits (cannibals, feather-pullers, egg-eaters).

12. All cockerels not needed for breeding purposes.

Keep

1. Strong, healthy, vigorous hens with short, neat heads and strong beaks.
2. The hens with long, deep, rectangular-bodies and parallel top and bottom lines.
3. The hens with large, bright eyes, active appearance and short, well-worn toe nails.
4. The hens with dusty, worn feathers, especially worn tail feathers, but having a bright, healthy look.
5. The hens that molt late.
6. The noisy, happy, friendly hens.
7. The early risers and those late to roost.
8. The vigorous hens with the faded beaks and shanks.
9. The hens with the soft, pliable abdomens.
10. The hens with the thin pelvic bones spread wide apart.
11. The early-hatched, well-grown pullets.
12. Large, strong, active, quick maturing cockerels of desired variety type and high-producing mothers.

There are five major factors in profitable poultry production—breeding, culling, feeding, housing, and care. These are the essentials; remember they will put the poultry business on a practical business basis.

Onions once frozen should remain frozen until time to use them.

If you want stocky, health plants in your hotbeds or greenhouse, ventilate well. Too much warmth and heat make tall, spindling, weak plants.

Have you organized a farmers' club or a reading circle in your community? Lots of happiness, as well as profit, may be obtained from an organization of this sort.

Ants Flee Before Tartaric Barrage.

A small amount of moistened tartar emetic and powdered sugar in equal parts will drive ants away if placed near their haunts. The mixture should not be thrown out when no longer required, but should be set aside for another emergency. Add a little water and the mixture can be used as before. Care should be taken to keep it out of the reach of little children.

WELCOME, WINTRY WINDS?

What did you do with your summer's dough?
It's gone; and you hate to tell.
Soon we'll have both hail and snow,
Its sure would make one yell.
But I we should worry I let it come,
The wintry winds we'll greet,
For we were shod at the Hospital
And we shall have dry feet.

Mr. A. W. Haycock, son of Mr. J. L. Haycock, who was contesting a seat at Winchester, England, as a labour candidate, was defeated by Major George Hennessy, Conservative.

Mr. S. E. Burley, who lives on Robbin's Hill, had the misfortune to lose his house and all its contents by fire on Friday last. Mr. Burley carried no insurance and not only lost his house and furniture, but his cellar contained 75 bus. of potatoes and a winter's supply of other vegetables.

Allan Davis, aged 25, of Wolfe Island, a returned man, who lost one of his legs in the war was seriously injured when he attempted to pull his gun out of a boat by the muzzle. The gun exploded and Mr. Davis is in Kingston hospital with his left arm badly torn and a hole in his side.

The agricultural representative in Lennox and Addington reports: A number of farmers have brought samples of alfalfa and clover seed to the office for test and grade. One farmer sold thirty-two bushels of Grimm's alfalfa, which graded No. 1 at $20 per bushel. Some farmers reported selling No. 1 red clover seed at $10 per bushel.

Amelia Maria Robertson, widow of the late Dr. A. S. Bristol, a former well-known resident of Napanee, died on Saturday at Oakville, at the residence of her sister. The remains were brought to Napanee and the funeral takes place this Tuesday afternoon from the home of Mrs. Nov. 24th, a splendid literary and musical entertainment will be given in addition to the presentation of Caps, Medals, Shields won. Prizes won at the annual Field Day. The Graduation Diplomas and Commercial Diplomas won during the past year will be awarded the same evening.

The corner of Dundas and West streets is getting a bad reputation for auto accidents. Nearly every Sunday recently an accident has occurred at this corner. On Sunday afternoon last a Chevrolet car, the property of Mr. Jack Vine, and driven by a couple of ladies, tried to climb the electric light pole at this corner. The pole was not badly damaged, but the car will need considerable repairing in front to put it in commission again. The ladies escaped practically uninjured.

A resident of the north country while hunting near his home, shot an eagle which had a spread of seven feet, four inches, which is a record. The man caused quite a stir in town when he arrived with the eagle and the majority of spectators witnessed a sight which they had never seen before. This is something for a hunter to be proud of as a specimen of this size has not been found in this neighborhood for some time and only one can be remembered to have been about this size.

Death came with awful suddenness to Marshall Oliver, Deseronto, on Thursday morning of last week, about 8 o'clock. Mr. Oliver was one of the oldest business men in the town, being one of the firm of Donohue & Oliver for over half a century. They have conducted the big dry goods and grocery stores on Main street. Mr. Oliver had entered his store as usual and was in the act of putting some fuel in the furnace when he suddenly succumbed. His half brother, and partner, Mr. Donohue, died about three years ago.

The annual Pound Social held on Thursday by the W. A. of St. Mary Magdalene Church, was very successful. The schoolroom was filled to its capacity, a very pleasant evening was spent by all, and many "pounds" of groceries, etc., contributed for the sale, which has since been sent to one of the Indian Schools maintained by the English church in Western Canada. Music was contributed by Miss Eleanor Hann, the Primary Class and the Waiters' orchestra. Mrs. Powell recited two enjoyable selections and Rev. J. H. B. Coleman gave a short lantern lecture on Missionary work in the Arctic Circle.

On Thursday morning, at 8 o'clock, in the Catholic church at Keene, Ontario, the marriage of Mr. George Houle and Miss Mary Catherine Wallace was solemnized, Rev. Father Maguire conducting in his fatherly manner the beautiful, solemn and impressive ceremony that made the happy couple man and wife. The groom is a prominent, progressive and successful business man of Deseronto and is the son of Mrs. Marie Angelic Houle and her late husband, Mr. Joseph Houle, of Deseronto. The bride is the splendid and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Wallace, of Keene, but who has been a prominent and successful teacher in the public schools of Napanee, and the social relations existing between the two. The worthy couple have many relatives and friends that heartily and warmly wish them happiness and comfort supreme in their obligations of wedlock and will be especially pleased to receive them with open arms in the society and life of their associations as one.

The December issueu of Rod and Gun in Canada is one which may truly be said to combine quantity and quality, and the many readers of this national sportsman's journal will no doubt take a lot of keen delight out of this number, the concluding issue of 1922. There are several splendid articles and a number of particularly good stories among them the humorous yarn, "They Went Fishing." The Guns and Ammunition department contains highly valuable articles by J. B. Mattern and E. T. D. Francis. J. W. Winson excels in "Blanketings," while the Trap Line and Camp Department have a lot of good things for everybody. Many other items of outstanding merit feature the December issue.

Rod and Gun in Canada is published monthly at Woodstock, Ontario, by W. J. Taylor, Limited.

Lines dedicated to the memory of Geraldine Sparks, Cataraqui (by a friend, S. B. Sparks.)

I heard them speak of Geraldine,
In tones of sad regret.
That in the home where she had been,
They're grieving for her yet.
Her father told of sufferings great,
Her mother spoke of hope and love,
Jesus says, "She doth but sleep,
Till I take her home above."
Then weep your Tears, but through them smile,
In faith of promise given,
Jesus says, "yet all the while,
Of such the kingdom of heaven."

Endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ.—2 Tim., 2-3; 3 Will praise Thee, O Lord, my God, with all my heart.—Ps. 86-12; Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for He hath visited and redeemed His people.—Luke 1-68; Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might relieve us from the present evil world, according to the will of God, our Father.—Gal. 1-4; As we have therefore opportunity let us do good unto all men.—Gal. 6-10.
